THURSDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 2.

RELIEF FOR HORSES -A Frenchman has just come forward to enter a theory of his own to prove that if one cares for one's horseflesh, their teeth should be attended to, and presents himself to society as a horse dentist. If the mouth of a hundred colts are examined, he says, there will not be found ten out of the number who have not something amiss with their teeth, and the influence of dentition is not less active on the health of a horse than on the health of a man. Sometimes an animal has teeth sharply pointed like needles, its gums suffer, and it can not properly eat its oats, the consequence being

A tooth which grown askew often causes a horse to hold his head badly, and pain from teeth makes an animal vicious. The other day this horse dentiat visited the stalls of M. Delamarre, and examined the mouth of his colt Viveur. He pointed out to the owner that the animal was plagued by a tooth which in its interest, should be extracted. Nothing, he says, is easier than to operate upon a horses' jaw. He approaches an animal suffering from bad or badly placed teeth, strokes his head caressingly, and in a twinkling of an eye introduces an instrument into the mouth and pulls out the effending
